According to the author, the job offers and training provided by Cybersupport are the work of fraudulent call centres. In the source, this is described as a separate group; no link to ‘9999’ has been established. [1]

The article examines in detail the recruitment process under the name ‘Cybersupport’: the training of new recruits, the workings of the HR department and the job advertisement for an ‘OSINT manager’. The author claims that these offers were used to recruit staff for call centres. No documents defining Kucherenko’s legal role in the project are provided in the text. [1]

This material has been prepared by the editorial team’s analysis department based on a compilation of published sources. The roles and connections described are based on the source’s information; the mention of an individual does not imply their guilt or current legal status.
