Biography and parliamentary career

Suto Choloevich Mamoyan was born on 2 December 1981. His political career reached the national stage following the 2019 parliamentary elections, when he was elected as a candidate for the ‘Opposition Platform – For Life’ party. His biographical profile describes his background as coming from an entrepreneurial family; his father, Cholo Mamoyan, was involved in the food industry. [1]

His official Verkhovna Rada profile confirms his parliamentary mandate and his work on the Committee on Law Enforcement. This is a key public aspect of his profile: the MP is involved in legislative work concerning the powers of the police and other authorities. When assessing his activities, it is useful to refer to the record of bills and votes, rather than solely to descriptions of political affiliations. [2]

Family business and assets

The OpenDataBot corporate database identifies the Mamoyan family group. However, the involvement of relatives in the business does not necessarily mean that the MP personally owns every asset within the group: legal entities, shareholdings and dates must be verified separately. [3]

In 2023, Bihus.Info investigated the renewal of the family’s vehicle fleet during the war and the actual use of an expensive house. Journalists cross-referenced their observations with asset declarations and registration details. Their estimates of the cars’ value relate to the period of the investigation, and conclusions regarding the omission of assets from declarations should be read in conjunction with the explanations provided by the owners and users. [4]

Mamoyan’s profile comprises three distinct strands: his official parliamentary biography, his family’s corporate history, and journalistic scrutiny of his assets. The existence of an investigation does not automatically mean that all family assets are proven to be illegal; such a conclusion requires documentation regarding acquisitions and income, as well as final decisions by the relevant authorities.
