Suto Mamoyan: parliamentary mandate, family assets and questions that have survived the original publication

Published 30.09.2026 · Updated 30.09.2026

Why you should read the story about expensive property and Post Office Square with a calendar to hand — and what details about Suto Mamoyan are confirmed by his parliamentary profile.

Sometimes the main flaw in a high-profile exposé is revealed in the very last paragraph. The ORD article dated 9 September 2026 invites the reader to await Suto Mamoyan's 2020 declaration, the deadline for which is supposedly due in a few days' time. We are looking at a text with different temporal layers. It would be a mistake to use it as a summary of recent events. [\[2\]](#)

This does not dispel the questions surrounding the politician. On the contrary, a precise chronology makes them more specific: which document was submitted, for what period, what exactly was investigated in it, and what was the outcome of the investigation?

What is officially confirmed

The parliamentary profile states that Suto Choloevich Mamoyan was sworn in as an MP on 29 August 2019. He was elected from the OPZZh list under number 33; the Verkhovna Rada's public register lists him as a member of the 'Platform for Life and Peace' group and as serving on the Committee on Law Enforcement. It is precisely public office that makes the story of this property a matter of public interest. However, membership of a relevant parliamentary committee does not in itself prove anything about a MP's influence over a specific investigator or a personnel appointment.

Family and assets: where the established facts end

ORD discusses the purchase prices of cars and flats, the business interests of Cholo Mamoyan's father, Sergei Mamoyan's political activities and alleged links to Rustam Sutko. A separate section of the article concerns the development of Post Office Square. The accusatory conclusions drawn by the author cannot automatically be applied to all the individuals named. To verify the property-related allegations, comparable figures are needed. The market asking price, the contract price, the condition of a specific property and the source of payment are all different pieces of information. A discrepancy between them may warrant investigation, but an arbitrarily applied market valuation does not in itself prove that the declaration is false.

Family ties alone do not explain the decision-making process either. If a question of conflict of interest is raised, it must be demonstrated which official held the authority, what decision they took, and what benefit it might have brought to a connected person. Without this chain of events, what remains is the author's suspicion, not an established pattern.

How to check for missing material

Claims of an 'internet purge' require evidence of their own: previous web addresses, archived copies, deletion notices, court documents or explanations from the editorial teams. The mere absence of a publication does not indicate who caused it to disappear or why.

For this dossier, we maintain a distinction between the official biography, historical property issues and unconfirmed accounts. The next key point in the story is a specific document: the result of an investigation, a court ruling or a response from the individual concerned. The date of reprinting must not take the place of such a point.

Profiles of those featured in the article

The profiles reveal the roles of the individuals mentioned in the cited sources. Their inclusion does not imply that guilt has been established.
