How the prosecution describes the network

In a press release from the Southern District of New York dated April 2023, Iván is named as one of the alleged leaders of a network linking suppliers of chemical precursors, Mexican laboratories, cross-border transport and money laundering. This is the prosecution’s account of the multi-defendant case. [1][2]

He faces charges including, amongst others, participation in a continuing criminal enterprise, a fentanyl conspiracy, firearms offences and a money-laundering conspiracy. The fact that he has relatives among the co-defendants does not constitute proof of his own involvement. [1][2]

Individual identification notice

The DEA has assigned the notice to the Southern District of New York, published a photograph and is offering up to $10 million for information leading to his arrest and/or conviction. The file retains his full name: the abbreviation ‘Guzmán’ could confuse Iván with other family members and other cases. [1][2]
