Drug and firearms charges

The warrant lists conspiracy and distribution of controlled substances, including heroin, cocaine, cocaine base, cannabis and fentanyl. A separate charge relates to the possession of firearms to facilitate drug trafficking. The case falls within the jurisdiction of the Federal District of Puerto Rico. [1][2]

According to the FBI, Los Baja Deo operated in seven social housing estates and five neighbouring communities, and also shipped drugs to the continental United States via the postal service. Mexican suppliers are cited as part of the overall supply network. [1][2]

The overall scale of the case does not equate to individual culpability

The FBI links the organisation to around twenty murders and numerous shoot-outs. This is characteristic of the alleged activities of the entire network: Medina Marrero's individual profile does not allow each murder to be attributed to him personally. His photograph, date of birth and the aliases 'La O', 'Omayra' and 'Onairam' have been published as part of the manhunt. [1][2]
