Andrei Igorenko

Published 12.11.2026 · Updated 12.11.2026

According to a source, Andrei Ignatenko was a senior manager at one of Khimprom’s offices in Ukraine. His official legal status has not been confirmed.

The source provided this photograph as a portrait of Andrei Ignatenko. The date the photograph was taken is unknown.

Status: Suspect

Other names: Andriy Igorenko; Andrei Ignatenko

Andrei Igorevich Ignatenko — a man whom the editorial source links to one of Khimprom’s offices in Ukraine. According to the source, at the time of the search, Ignatenko was a senior manager at the office. The same source considers him a key figure within the organisation, but has not provided any documents that would establish the scope of his responsibilities or confirm his current role.

What the source said about the office

The documents provided state that Ignatenko was born in 1985. The source describes him as a senior member of staff at the office, whom they associate with ‘Khimprom’. From this description, it is not possible to establish exactly what his role was, to whom he reported, or whether he was on the premises at the time of the investigative actions. The source did not specify the case number under investigation or the date of the search, so it has not yet been possible to cross-reference this account with specific court documents.

Photographs which the source links to the search

Two photographs show open metal boxes containing bundles of banknotes. The third shows cardboard boxes containing gloves and other items, the nature of which cannot be determined from the photograph. The source links the images to a search carried out in connection with the ‘Khimprom’ case. The editorial team has been unable to independently verify the date, the location where the photographs were taken, the ownership of the items, or whether all the photographs were taken in the same room. It is impossible to determine the amount of cash shown in these images.

Which transactions are corroborated by open sources?

On 21 March 2019, representatives of the Ukrainian Prosecutor General’s Office and the Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) announced an operation against a network linked to ‘Khimprom’. According to their information, investigative activities were taking place in Kyiv and several regions; at a press briefing, it was reported that cash and other valuables had been seized. In October 2020, the SBU separately reported on nine searches in Kyiv and the Kyiv region relating to a different case, which mentioned a laboratory, warehouses and call centres. The fact that there were several separate operations is important for verification: similar details do not allow the photographs provided to be dated or attributed to any one of these incidents. On 22 April 2026, the National Police of Ukraine published a separate statement regarding investigative activities into a network it refers to as ‘Khimprom’. It provides context for the investigation but does not confirm Ignatenko’s involvement or any link between the footage obtained by the editorial team and that operation. [3]

How to verify this information

To identify the specific incident, it would be helpful to have the criminal case number, the search warrant, or the report specifying the date and describing the items seized. To verify Ignatenko's role, documents or evidence linking him to specific actions at the office are required. The editorial team is prepared to supplement the dossier with such material or with a comment from Ignatenko himself.
