The ‘Rublev’ pawnbroker’s

In a 2020 interview, the publication Khronika presented Nikita Sherman as the head of the ‘Rublev’ pawnbroker. He spoke about working with precious stones, valuing items and launching a separate jewellery brand. In a press release issued by the pawnbroker itself in November 2020, Sherman is named as its founder. These publications describe his role at the time the articles were published. [1] [2]

According to the editorial team’s source, Sherman previously owned the pawnbroker and holds Russian and Israeli citizenship. Publicly available information about Rublev’s operations does not allow us to establish his citizenship or the date on which he ceased his involvement in the business. [1] [2]

What the editorial team is investigating

A source within law enforcement agencies, known as KARTEL KHIMPROM, reports Sherman’s alleged active involvement in ‘Khimprom’ and an expected notification of suspicion. The editorial team has not found any public legal documents relating to this report. The pawnbroking business is described in the interview and press release. [1] [2]

Journalists are investigating which specific incident the source’s information is based on and what role the source attributes to Sherman. Should documents relating to specific events come to light, the editorial team will publish them in separate articles and update this dossier.
