A source at Kartel-Khimprom describes Yuri Kozmin as one of ‘Khimprom’s’ key figures at the interface between supply and production. According to the source, Kozmin was responsible for the supply of precursors, oversaw production operations and travelled with security detail. His name had previously appeared in a report on Yegor Burkin’s network. Details regarding Kozmin’s responsibilities and security arrangements have been provided by a source to the editorial team.

Who made the decisions following delivery?

According to the source’s account, Kozmin’s role spanned two stages. The first involved the receipt of raw materials. The second concerned the operations of the production unit following their receipt. To verify the first part, documents relating to orders, payments and acceptance are crucial. For the second stage, it is necessary to establish who set the targets on site, received production reports and disposed of the output. The mere mention of his name in the report on the network does not allow us to determine at which stage he may have been active or what decisions he made.

The source’s information does not include dates or production batch numbers against which these claims can be cross-referenced. The starting point under investigation is a single incident for which there is a confirmed order and an independent record of its execution. Should documents relating to deliveries and production operations come to light, it will be possible to compare them and determine whether control over both stages was concentrated in the hands of a single individual.

An earlier mention and a report on security

Yuri Kozmin’s name appears in a publication on egorburkin.net concerning alleged connections within Burkin’s inner circle. The text includes him in a general list of names and refers the reader to a broader diagram. The mention itself does not confirm either control over production or details regarding security arrangements. Information about security was provided separately by a source speaking to the editorial team. The editorial team found no dated material in the open sources examined that would allow this report to be verified.

What the evidence on other laboratories reveals

In a separate case concerning an inter-regional network, the Ukrainian National Police described an underground production operation with its own warehouses, logistics, record-keeping and quality control. This illustrates why verifying the theory regarding production management requires data from the site itself and records of instructions. The information in the police report relates to a different investigation.

The editorial team is verifying the information regarding supplies and production management separately. The spelling of the name provided by the source has been used for this profile. No document detailing Kozmin’s procedural status has been found in publicly available materials relating to the incidents described.
