Biographical details

Elton Ibragimov was born on 3 November 1994 in Barnaul, according to the editorial team. In the description provided, his full name is given as ‘Elton Nazim-Ogly Ibragimov’. The same source states that, prior to his time in Moscow, he lived and worked in Ukraine and Turkey. No independent publications could be found that would allow the names of his employers and the dates to be verified.

The Tadance sports database matches his full name and date of birth. The profile lists Barnaul as his location and details his results from junior dance sport competitions in Barnaul and Novosibirsk in 2009. This is an independent cross-check of biographical data. Information regarding his work in the Moscow offices is derived from the editorial source’s account. [1]

What does ‘de facto control’ mean according to the source’s account?

The editorial description mentions two operational offices on Povarskaya Street and Shabolovka, as well as a separate site which the source refers to as a ‘service centre’. Ibragimov is said to be responsible for coordinating the sites, liaising with department heads and requesting resources from teams in Ukraine and Turkey. The source also names Albert Khamitov as his deputy for security matters.

The legal entities ‘Dayana’ and ‘Anteq’, as cited by the source, are listed in publicly available corporate databases. Their registration records confirm the existence of these companies. The theory regarding the de facto manager concerns powers within the offices, which could be verified through instructions to staff, the approval of expenses and correspondence regarding the operation of the sites. The registry data examined does not establish a link between these powers and Ibragimov. [2] [3]

What is known from publicly available reports

According to an ‘Interfax’ report dated 11 December 2024, the FSB announced that it had shut down three Moscow call centres, which the agency linked to the ‘Khimprom’ network. Ibragimov’s name is not mentioned in this report. To verify the version regarding management, it is important to
