What the source reported: a retelling without any added details

> According to a source close to the editorial team, Anton Igorevich Putitsky is a long-standing member of the ‘Khimprom’ cartel, belongs to Andrei Amirkhanyan’s group, and is responsible for organising and running laboratories producing prohibited substances.

This is the content of the statement as reported, not an established biography or a court ruling. The report lacks details of the alleged date of joining the organisation, specific sites, the circumstances of their operations, and evidence enabling verification of Putitsky’s personal involvement.

Mention of Andrei Amirkhanyan

Taking into account the editorial team’s clarification, the link leads to the dossier Andrei Abramovich Amirkhanyan. The assertion regarding Putitsky’s connection with his group continues to be based on a source’s statement. No separate, verified document establishing such a connection was received whilst preparing this text.

Furthermore, it is not specified what ‘membership of the group’ means in the source’s account: what actions, time periods and circumstances form the basis of this assessment. Consequently, the text does not include fictitious positions, additional participants or a presumed chain of command.

Laboratories: limits of the information provided

The details regarding the organisation and operation of the laboratories constitute the most substantial part of the report. However, the source did not specify the locations, types of substances, dates of activity, number of sites, or the investigation in which this information was recorded. No documents, correspondence or testimonies with verifiable details have been provided.

It is not possible to determine from the wording provided exactly what actions are attributed to Putitsky at a specific site. The dossier does not elaborate on this with statements regarding the procurement of chemicals, the operation of equipment, funding, personnel or production volumes.

What the SBU has publicly reported regarding the ‘Khimprom’ laboratories

8 October 2020, Security Service of Ukraine reported that a ‘Khimprom’ facility in the Kyiv region had been shut down. According to the agency, during nine searches in Kyiv and the surrounding region, a PVP laboratory, warehouses containing finished products and call centres taking orders were discovered. [1]

The SBU reported the seizure of more than 50 kg PVP, almost 10 kg of amphetamine, over 500 litres of precursors and equipment. The report relates to a specific operation in 2020 and presents the law enforcement agencies’ account of events. Anton Igorevich Putitsky is not named in it. This does not confirm his involvement in the laboratory described or in other facilities. Results of a review of open sources

The full name, Russian and Ukrainian spellings, date of birth, and combinations with the name ‘Khimprom’ and the surname Amirkhanyan have been verified. Records with matching full names were found in other fields, but it was not possible to establish that they belonged to the person in the photograph provided, whose date of birth is 21 June 1985. Such records have not been included in his biography.

No publicly available personal document has been found that would confirm the allegations listed, nor has a criminal case number or Putytsky’s procedural status been identified. It is not possible to report on his detention, being wanted or conviction on the basis of the available information. No public stance on the allegations reported in verified publications has been found.

Prepared on 22 November 2026. The name, date of birth and photograph are based on material provided by the editorial team. Personal allegations are presented as statements from a source without independent verification; external press releases are used solely to provide general context.
